

We do not live in a fascist state. Public airwaves should serve the public. Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air a one-sided overtly political and misleading anti-Kerry documentary days before the election with no balancing presentation is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation and lax oversight.

Because of our present licensing system, Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and therefore, is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
